GLOBAL FLOWS OF MIGRANTS AND THEIR IMPACTS ON NORTH EUROPEAN WELFARE STATES

FLOW Final Conference
4 - 5 November 2021
Copenhagen Campus, A.C Meyers Vænge 15
How can the welfare state handle challenges concerning migration?
Since 2018, an interdisciplinary research team of science and social science/humanities scholars has explored the effect of immigration on the developed North European welfare states and the possibilities for improving both the socioeconomic and the sociocultural integration of immigrants. A special emphasis has been on the consequences of climate changes for future migration flows. We invite stakeholders, professionals and scholars to discuss our results regarding managing migration flows and the ways in which the socioeconomic and sociocultural integration of immigrants may be improved in developed welfare states!

FLOW
Aalborg University specializes in migration as a strategic research area. The university funded the project “Global flows of migrations and their impact on North European welfare states (FLOW)”, 2018 – 2021, with 1.2 million euros. The FLOW team consists of an interdisciplinary group of political scientists, sociologists, geographers, historians and education scientists, coordinated by Professor Christian Albrekt Larsen. Since the FLOW project start in 2018, we have analysed migrant flows into Northern Europe with a special emphasis on climate changes, patterns of socioeconomic and sociocultural integration and practices within education and labour-market policies. The FLOW project team have special expertise on migration issues in the Nordic context, especially in a Danish context. The members have unique access to and experience with Danish register and survey data on migration issues. All members of the FLOW project embrace the interdisciplinary approach – a hallmark of Aalborg University.

Detailed program for the panel sessions

Panel 1: Understanding current and future flow of immigrants into Northern Europe
Organized by Lanciné Diop

Current migration trends cause policy makers to question the sustainability of the Nordic Welfare State. However, in order to address these future challenges to the Nordic welfare States, it is crucial to understand what drives present and future immigrants to the Nordic countries. This panel will discuss different ways of modelling current and future migration flows into the Northern European countries while considering a variety of pull and push factors including climate change in the origin countries and policies in the destination countries. The panel welcomes papers focusing on modelling the inflows of asylums seekers, labour migrants, climate migrants, etc., as well as papers that outline future scenarios of immigration into Europe, especially into North Western Europe. A thorough discussion of the methodological, empirical as well as theoretical progress in modelling current and future migration inflows is crucial to draw a more comprehensive picture to policy makers regarding possible scenarios for immigration these countries may face.

Thursday 4 Nov. 13.30-14.30

13.30 - 13.50 Lanciné Diop, Aalborg University: “The impact of diaspora on the number and the selection of immigrants in Denmark”

13.50 - 14.10 Marina Georgati and Carsten Keßler, Aalborg University: “Spatially Explicit Population Projections: a case study in Copenhagen, Denmark”

Panel 2: Northern European public debates and opinions towards migration and integration
Organized by Troels Fage Hedegaard & Mette Buchardt
Thursday 4 Nov. 14.45-16.15

13.45 - 14.00 Troels Fage Hedegaard, Aalborg University: "The Muslim penalty: Results from a conjoint survey experiment on granting non-EU migrants permanent residency in four Western European countries”

15.55 - 16.15 Discussion and questions
Panel 4: Frontlines of socio-cultural integration of immigrants in the Nordics: early integration efforts

Organized by Karen N. Breidahl & Nanna Ramsing Enemark

The panel deals with how socio-cultural integration of immigrants takes place within frontline organizations of the Nordic welfare states. The panel in particular focuses on the organizations (and their frontline staff) that deal with asylum seekers and newly arrived immigrants forming their formative experiences of the society they are currently living. Experiences that shape their subsequent socio-cultural integration trajectories including those relating to democratic norms, institutional trust and societal participation.

Thursday 4 Nov. 14.45-16.15

14.45 - 15.00 Hanne C. Kavli, Fafo Norway: “Trust building among refugees and why we should care about the impact of welfare state institutions?”
